Our Lady's Island

Our Lady's Island is an ancient place of pilgrimage in the southeast corner of Ireland in the diocese of Ferns. One famous pagan shrine, possibly a temple to the sun, stood at Carnesore Point where a natural stone structure is believed to have been a Druid's altar. In Penal times this was used as a Mass Rock.

In a list of Irish place-names published in Liis-Leabha i na Gaeilge in 1900 the Irish name for Our Lady's Island is given as Cluain-na-mBan - 'the meadow of the women'. Considering that this locality was the centre of druidical worship, it would not be far-fetched to suggest that Our Lady's Island was in pre- Christian times inhabited by female druids.

This place of pilgrimage dates from the Third Crusade, over 800 years ago. Visit the remains of the Augustinian Church of St. Mary or the parish Church (z 867) that showcases the work of Pugin and Ashlin. On this renowned sedimentary lagoon, you can spot breeding terns and black-healed gulls. Winter visitors include Whooper Swans, light-bellied Brent Geese, wigeons, gadwall, and more. Rare plants include Cottonweed, Lesser Centaury, Foxtail Stonewort and 'lagoon specialists' invertebrates.
